B. Progress Toward FiveYear Review Planning Goals

We have successfully hired four tenure track faculty since 2014, gaining ground tatedrgsal to build a more globallyfocused curriculum and to tteat curriculum back to the local story. In terms of curriculumspecifically, as a faculty we developed a new vision for the future of our undergraduate major that has been largely implement with the transition to semesters providing a more dynamic curriculum

III. DISCUSSION OF PROGRAM DATA & RESOURCE REQUESTS

A. Discussion & Trends & Reflections

Trends

The dataremains steady from previous years. We are trending towards stasis! Some of that is okay – some not so great. But the number of majors and degree confermedrs relativelysteady and FTES and SFR are still healthy. Ougraduation rates and (lack) student diversity remain an issue. We have been quite aware of this, especially what we see as some urgent is studegewider imbalance and its impact in the classroom. This has become a focus of the department as we strive to build and strengthen community and camaraderie.

Reflections

In both of our programs, we feel that diversifying the student boalyois ority. History is still predominantly white major we can only guess as to why, but those guesses are based largely in what we see as traditional perceptions of history: as stale, dominated by Eurocentric narratives; esoteric, not leading to concrete jobselyond teaching. While there is not much we can do about that last bit, we do feel changing the first two perceptions is possible. The reality of the department faculty over the past ten years has resulted in an emphasis on US history and European history at the tenure track faculty to offer consistent courses in Latin American and African American history, those courses flailed. We have noticed that since the arrival of a tenutmack Latin Americanist, there has been an uptick in enrollments in thos courses, and a slight builtscernible increase in majors of Latin American desc We are hopeful that these trends, buoyed by a hire ifrifean American History and a new cache of courses planned for semesters, will continuation continuation of the students numbers majors have been steadily climbing, especially among Latinx studen We are hoping this trend continues. In terms of gender, however, we remain predominantly maland anecdotal evidence and department surveys have left us concerned about our female majors, who at this point acoustor approximately 30% of our majors. We are explicitly addressing this in terms of advising and classroom climate. We are monitoring these numbers carefully. In terms of degree completion, the data appears to comfinant the department had alreadegbn to sense and address: that students in both the Graduate and Undergraduate programs need more deliberate guidance towards degree completion specially true in the MA program It is a completely reasonable expectation to have a greater percentage and idates through the program is gears. New processes established in MA program during the past two years, and built upon and reinforced under semesters, include such deliberate guidance, including advising and portfolio courses, an official process for applying for capstone completion, and practicums to highlight and encourage completed research projects. In terms of our undergraduate students, while we remain somewhat solid with transfers, the program needs more deliberate guidance for freshman though the degree. Again, we have addressed this beginning Fall 2018, under the semester system, here advising has been specifically included as part of course work, and where students are expected to complete a guided portfolio before graduation.

As for faculty, while the data reveals a steady increase in TT faculty over past fourthearscrease has
